	After the Tito-Cominform break and until 1 January 1950, the Soviet Union continued to deliver JAK planes to Yugoslavia. Those planes delivered after the Cominform rift were without armament or munition. The Soviet excuse was that, prior to the Cominform break, Yugoslavia had been supplied with more armament and munition for JAK planes than with the planes themselves and, accordingly, had sufficient amounts of armament on hand with which to equip planes arriving after that time.
